

Health MBA & Health eMBA Programs

For almost 150 years, Helsinki University of Technology has educated professionals to top management positions in Finnish companies

Healthcare systems are undergoing a major transition the global and national levels. To date, excellence in medicine and other fields has driven management and leadership in both public and private healthcare organizations. However, given the current developments in the sector, we see that this learning-by-doing experience in management is no longer sufficient.

There is an increasing need for professionally organized education that makes experts in healthcare fluently become also experts in business and management. At best, this training would draw from the contemporary and well developed reservoir of conceptual and practical management doctrines in the generic fields of management, economics, strategy, finance, accounting, operations management, and so on and add applications to the healthcare sector on top of that.

This is what the TTK Health MBA and Health eMBA programs deliver. The programs begin with an extensive set of healthcare specific studies. This is complemented and extended by generic business and management content studied together with other MBA students from a variety of industries such as information technology & software, heavy machinery, pulp and paper, chemicals, professional services, and consumer goods. This multidisciplinary interaction and networking adds the finishing touch to the learning.

Both Health MBA programs are part-time and relevant for experts with diverse backgrounds: medical doctors, masters in healthcare and medicine, senior health care professionals, etc.
